

THE GREY ELEPHANT
GIFTS A WILDFLOWER

June 21, 2020

"If we believe that rights are inherent, then children have rights. Their rights are not bestowed upon them by adults. They are present at birth. By acknowledging children's inherent right to participation, inviting them into conversations that impact their lives, we are offering society a precious asset."

RIGHT TO RIGHTS

Rights shape our choices for children.

Participation is a child's right as is provision and protection.

But participation is not given as much importance so space honours the child's right to participate.

Rights of children are values that guide the organisation and are woven as actions by all adults.

HAPPY FATHER'S DAY TO
ALL DADDIES,
WHO RAISE CHILDREN.

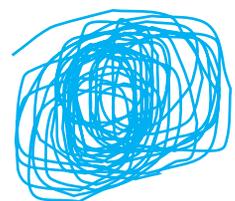

The Story of how one Sunday,
Human Engagement Studio
(HES) found our elephants,
and our tusks and non-tusks.

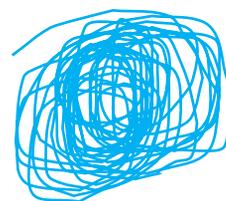

PEK: Happy
Father's Day,
Ken. You are
cosmic
daddy.

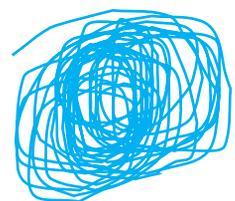

Ken: More like
'see stars'
Daddy.

PEK: I am ready to plant a new
mango tree.

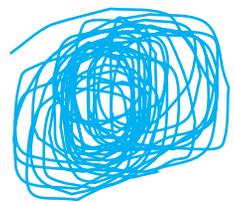

PEK: It is the
seed of joy.

PEK: We have already
begun.

PEK: Let the
past go.

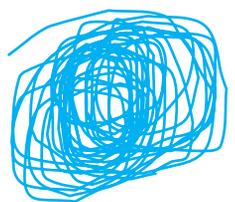

Fall and stay in love
with life. PLAY again, &
again.

Manju:

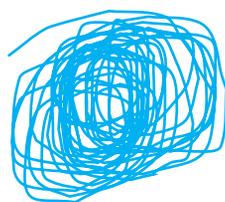

Ken needs a
tusk.

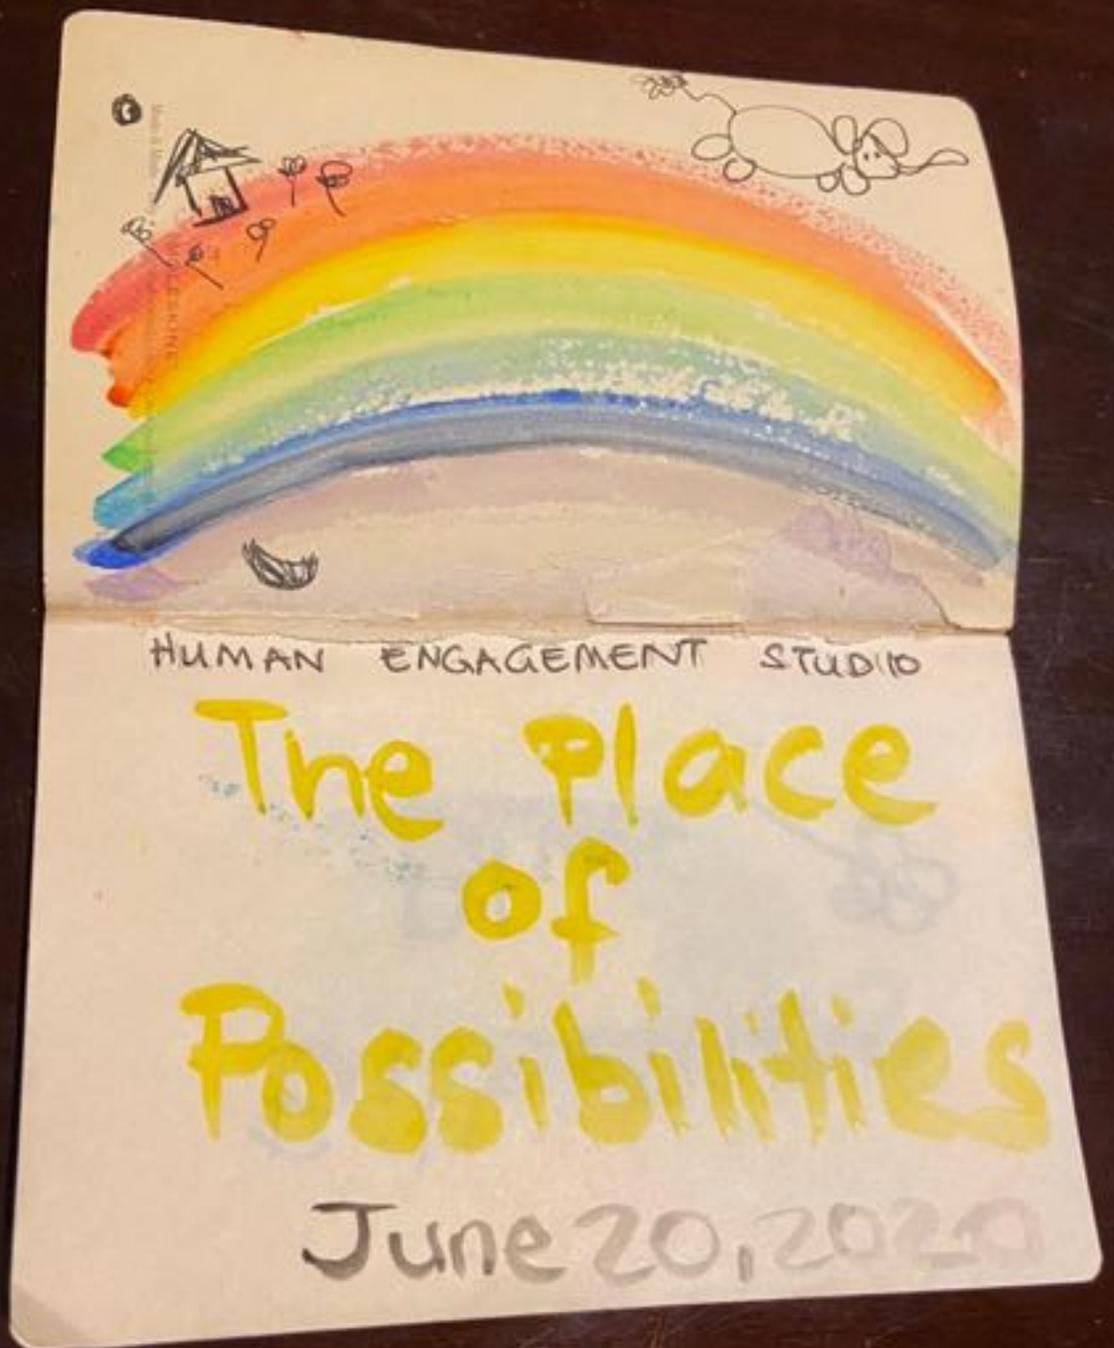

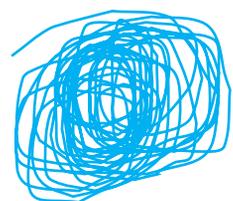

Himal:

Follow the rainbow.

Vashima: Wonderful conversations, pics and poems!!! We have pictures for these poems for publication - gift for all!

Peng-Ean Khoo (PEK) is up to some seriously
good mischief with
her wildflower
brush-pen.

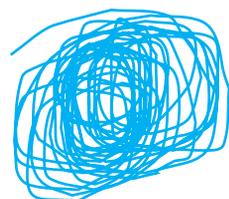

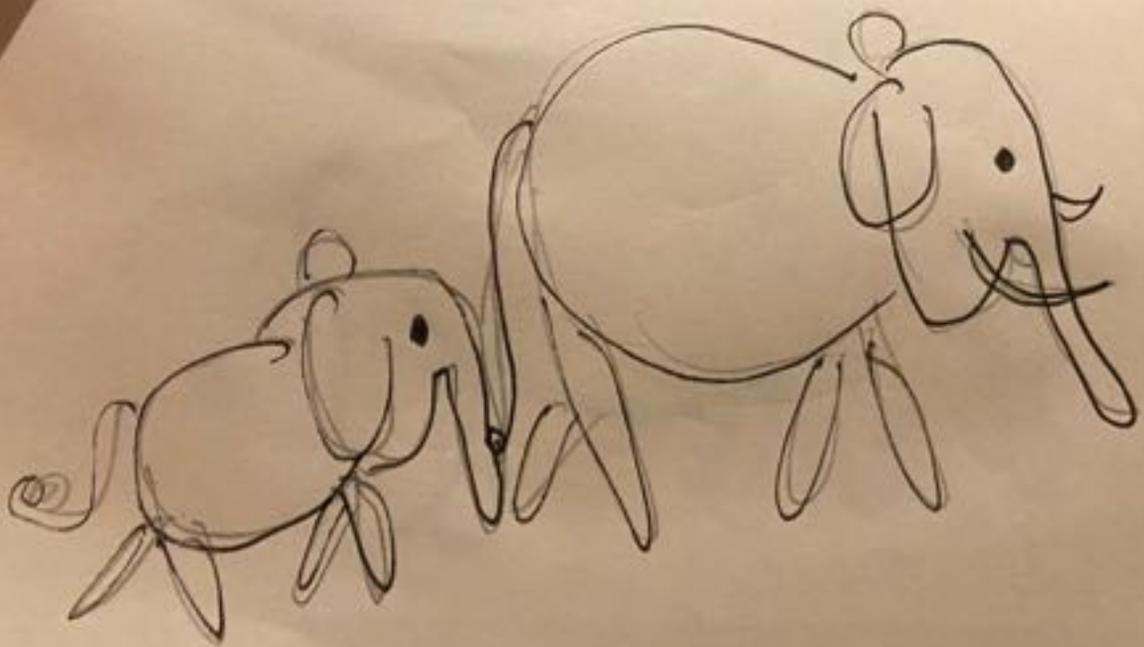

Vashima Goyal is done
conceptualising
and is busy
implementing A Place of Possibilities for Glocal Cities.

Himal Ruparel is in London wondering
how to get on a flight to her next
adventure.

Manju Nair is in the middle of
completing her
PhD.

Kenneth Ngo got his tusks under the
midnight sun and
shares his music
with all children,
adults and wildlife.

Manju: 'Hahaha you are too much! Really had no idea you would do this. Originality and spontaneity flowing like milk – yes milk not water.'

Manju:

‘ still
laughing
about being
caught off
guard. You
surprise
even us who
think they
know you.’
